

On Zombies: The Contamination of Viral Memes With excerpts from Aphorisms: Volume One In which is explored the idea that “zombies are human animals infected with unhealthy memes”. Once born, unhealthy memes flourish cancerously like lies piling atop themselves, spawning the fruits of imagination, filling the contaminated component part of the human animal’s understanding with most-desirable and improbable ideas. The result of the contaminated topics (i.e., the infected component parts of the understanding) is the zombification of the human animal. Zombies, then, are human animals infected with unhealthy memes. A symptom of zombification is a resistance to the acceptance of most-probable ideas in some subjects and not others. Zombies can prove rational in some matters (e.g., business, parenting, travel, etc.) and irrational in others (e.g., religion, politics, economics, etc.). The spectrum of resistance to reconciliation with probability can range from refusals to discuss the matter to presentations of illogical arguments to deception to emotional appeals to anger to violence. This process reveals the characteristics of zombies as existing in a sleep-like (closed) and hypnotized-like (irrational) state. Once an unhealthy meme has been accepted as true, the infection is both hard to cure and hard to contain. _____
