

This book about driving behavior begins with interviews among train engineers, motorcyclists, truckers, funeral directors, and other people - What would you like to say to drivers? The middle is the authors take on driving as an adult educator, not a crusader - road rage, bad weather driving, a letter to teenagers - all in a few pages each. The next part is a multiple car highway crash spliced together from real events from the mindsets of the drivers before the crash to one year later. The book concludes with what the author refers to as relationships on the road. One reader telephoned, We bought our seventeen year old son his first car. Two weeks later he died in a crash, his fault. I wish he read your book! The rides along with the Michigan State Troopers were incredible, everything from hilarious moments to absolute awfulness. Their assistance has provided the substance for this book that has multinational potential. An airline captain said, There should be a copy of this book in every vehicles glove box.
